TELEGRAPH EXTENSION.

We regret to inform our readers that the committee appointed to secure subscriptions for the telegraph extension to this place find it impossible to raise the necessary funds for the purpose. We understand, however, that the Hudson's Bay Co. have now offered one thousand dollars towards the scheme, five hundred dollars from the trading department, and five hundred from the land department. This with the sum offered by the Land Colonization Co., will raise the amount of subscription from these two sources to one half the amount required. Surely the business men of the town will not allow the scheme to fall through with such a liberal bonus to begin the canvass. Any want of interest evinced in the matter is more to be regretted when we remember that the Government employees are just now in a position to push the construction of the line vigorously forward, and delay on our part now may mean the delay of months on the part of the Government, at a time when it may suit our convenience to build the line but not theirs. Those residents of the district who have real and others who labor under fancied wrongs manage to keep up a continual howl about the dilatory manner in which we are treated by the powers that be. But delays in granting land patents or weekly mails, with the responsibility resting on the shoulders of the Ministers, and delays on the part of the people of Prince Albert to carry out their stipulated contract with the Government seem to be quite different things. It all depends upon "whose ox is gored." If sectional and other interests were set aside and a proper subscription list once started we feel assured that the people would readily subscribe to necessary funds to complete the contract. It is also to be remembered that only a small part of the money expended will be taken from the locality, as contractors and other employees engaged in the work will for some time remain here.

REMOVING THE BOULDERS

The unusual stir in the vicinity of the Navigation Company's freight shed caused by the building of the dredge and derrick and other preparations that are being made for the removal of boulders from the north branch of the Saskatchewan River is an indication that if we have had to wait a little while for the expenditure of the sum which was placed in the estimates for the purpose of improving the Saskatchewan River, we are to have the satisfaction of knowing that the work is likely to be in roughly done when undertaken. Two boats are to be built, one at Edmonton, the other here. That which is being built here is now well on its way to completion. Some ten men will be engaged for the greater part of the summer in the working and construction of the boat. The boulders at Cole's Falls will require the attention of the crew the greater part of the season, but a number of large rocks will be removed between this place and the Falls. Those connected with the boats assure us that the removal of these impediments will leave the river comparatively free from obstruction. The building and working of these dredges will require the outlay of the whole sum granted. We may therefore feel assured that as soon as the work has been completed we will not be further troubled with the vexatious delays to which we have been subjected by the failure of the Company's boats to ascend the river, and if their plans are as thorough as from present appearances they would seem to be, we have every reason to congratulate both ourselves and the Government upon the satisfactory manner in which at least one branch of the public works will have been executed.

LIQUOR LAWS.

Some idea of the difficulty of defining the exact amount of power possessed by Local Legislatures in regulating the liquor traffic may be gathered from the interest excited by the case of Povlin vs. the City of Quebec, at present before the courts, which it is expected will settle the vexed question. The history of the case is as follows:—The plaintiff having been fined under the Quebec license law for selling on Sunday applied to the Provincial Courts to have the conviction quashed, one of the pleas being that the license law was beyond the jurisdiction of the Quebec Legislature. The Superior Court and the Court of Queen's Bench decided that the regulation of the liquor traffic was a police matter and within the jurisdiction of the Legislature. The plaintiff then carried the case to the Supreme Court where the judges were equally divided, the result being that the appeal fell through. The case will now, we believe, be carried to the Privy Council, and the decision of that body will be awaited with interest.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A lively discussion is going on in the columns of the Winnipeg Times over the subject of religion. Religion is a pretty broad subject to deal with, and as there are so many different ways of approaching it the less it is discussed in the public prints by controversialists, the better. People who wage war in the press about religion are usually a great deal more concerned in making the points against their adversaries that they set out to make, than they are about the interests of religion itself. We are not aware of there being a single instance on record in which one of the writers who have carried on a religious controversy in the press has succeeded in converting the other.

Lord Lansdowne, our new governor-general, is being abused because he is an absentee landlord and does not live on his estates. It is somewhat unfair to abuse a man on this score. The atmosphere in Ireland has not been particularly healthful for landlords for several years past, and for some reason or other the people of that country studiously decline to observe a close season for landlords, although a close season is in force as regards smaller game. The position of affairs is about this:—If a landlord does not live on his estates he is abused, and if he does live on his estates he runs the risk of being shot. Under the circumstances, what is he to do? It is a case in which there is not much chance, perhaps, but a man's first thought is naturally to preserve a whole skin.

STEWART & WOOTTON

THE BAD BOY MOURNS FOR A DECEASED ROOSTER.

The grocery man's disappointment. A few pictures of domestic business and sentiment. The faithful female.

"Why don't you take an ice pick, and clean the dirt out from under your finger nails?" said the grocery man to the bad boy, as he came in the store and stroked the cat the wrong way, as she lay in the sun on the counter, on a quire of mangle paper.

"Can't remove the dirt for thirty days. It is an emblem of mourning. Had a funeral at our house yesterday," and he took a pickle out of a tub and put it in the cat's mouth, and shut her teeth together on it, and then went to the stove, while the grocery man, whose back had been turned during the pickle exercise, thought by the way the cat jumped into the dried apple barrel and began to peep and scratch with all four of her feet, and yowl, that she was going to have a fit.

"I hadn't heard about it," said the grocery man, as he took the cat by the neck and tossed her out into the back shed into an old oyster box full of saw dust, with a parting injunction that if she was going to have fits she had better go out where there was plenty of fresh air. "Death is always a sad thing to contemplate. One day we are full of health and joy and old victuals, and the next we are screwed down in a box, a few tears are shed, and there is a race to see who shall get back from the cemetery first, and though we may think we are an important factor in the world's progress, and sometimes feel as though it would be unable to put up margins and have to stop there, the world goes right along, and it must annoy people who die to realize that they don't count for aught. The greatest man in the world is only a nine-spot when he is dead, because some body else takes the tricks the dead man ought to have taken. But, say, who is dead at your house?"

"Our rooster. Take care, don't you hit me with that canvassed ham," said the boy as the grocery man looked mad to learn that there was nobody dead but a rooster, when he had preached such a sermon on the subject. "Yes, how soon we are forgotten when we are gone. Now, you would have thought that rooster's hen would have remained faithful to him for a week at least. I have watched them all the spring, and I never saw a more perfect picture of devotion than that between the bantam rooster and his hen. They were constantly together, and there was nothing too good for her. He would dig up angle worms and call her, and when she came up on a gallop she would look so proud of her rooster, and look as though he was saying to her, 'I'm a daisy, and then she would look at him as if she would like to bite him, and just as she was going to pick up the worm he would snatch it and swallow it himself, and chuckle and walk around and be full of business, as though wondering why she didn't take the worm after he had dug it for her, and then the hen would look disappointed at first, and then she would look resigned, as much as to say, 'Worms are too rich for my blood anyway, and the poor dear rooster needs them more than I do, because he has to do all the rowing,' and she would go off and find a grasshopper and eat it on the sly for fear he would see her and complain because she didn't divide. O! I have never seen anything that seemed to me so human as the relations between that rooster and hen. He seemed to try to do everything for her. He would make her stop scratching when she laid an egg, and he would try to cackle and crow over it as as though he had laid it, and she would get off in a corner and chuck in a modest, retiring manner, as though she wished to convey the idea to the servant girls in the kitchen that the rooster had to do all the hard work, and she was only a useless appendage, fit only for society and company for him. But I was diverted with him when the poor hen was setting. The first week that she sat on the eggs he seemed to get along first rate, because he had a couple of flower beds to dig up, which a press of business had caused him to neglect before, and a couple of neighbor gardens to destroy, so he seemed to be glad to have his hen retire to her tender and set, but after he had been sick out of the garden and flower beds he seemed to be nervous, and evidently wanted to be petted, and he would go near the hen and she would seem to tell him to go and take a walk around the block, because she hadn't time to leave her business, and if she didn't attend to them would have a lot of spoiled eggs in their hands and no facility to bring up. He would scold and scold to tell her that it was all foolishness, that for his part he didn't want to have a lot of chickens squawking around. He would seem to argue with her that a brood of chickens would be a dead give-away on their both, and they would at once be classed as old folks, while if they were alone in the world they would be spring chickens, and could get young society, but the hen would scold back, and tell him he ought to be ashamed of himself to talk that way, and he would go off mad, and skid around a spell, and then go to a neighbor's hen house and sometimes he wouldn't come back till the next day. The hen would be sorry she had spoken so cross, and would seem pained at his going away and would look anxiously for his return, and when he came back after being out in the rain all night, she would be solicitous after his health, and tell him he ought to wrap something around him, but he acted as though he didn't care for his health, and he would go out again and get chilled. Finally the hen came out the nest with ten chicks, and the rooster seemed very proud, and when anybody came out to look at them he would crow and seemed to say they were all his chickens though the hen was a long time hatching them, and if it had been him that was setting on them he could have hatched them out in a week, or died trying. But the exposure told on him, and he went into a decline, and one morning we found him dead. Do you know, I never see a hen that seemed to realize a calamity as she did. She looked pale and her eyes looked red, and she seemed to be utterly crushed. If the chickens, which were so young they could not realize that they were little orphans, became noisy, and got to pulling and hawking over a worm, and conducted themselves in an unseemly manner, she would talk to them in her language, with tears in her eyes, and it was a picture of woe. But the next day a neighboring rooster got to looking through the fence from the alley, and trying to flirt with her. At first she was indignant, and seemed to tell him he ought to go about his business, and leave her alone, but the dupe kept chucking, and pretty soon the widowed hen edged up towards the fence, and asked him to come in, but the hole in the fence was so small for him, and then the chickens went out in the alley, and the hen followed them. I shall always think she told the chickens to go out, as she would have an excuse to go after them, and flirt with the rooster, and I think it is a perfect shame. She is out in the alley half the time, and I could cuff her. It seemed to me wrong to so soon forget a deceased rooster, but I suppose a hen can't be any more than human. Say, you don't want to buy a good dead rooster do you? You could pick it and sell it to somebody that owes you, for a spring chicken."

"No, I don't want any deceased poultry, that's full of grief, and you better go home and watch your hen, or you will be bereaved some more," and the grocery man went out in the shed to see if the cat was over its fits, and when he came back the boy was gone, and after a while the grocery man saw a crowd in front of the store and he went out and found the dead rooster lying on the vegetable stand with a newspaper on its breast, on which was a sign, "This rustic died of colic. For sale cheap to boarding house only. He took the dead rooster and threw it out in the street, and looked up and down the street for the bad boy, and went in and hid a raw hide where he could reach it easily.

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor of The Times.

Sir, In your last issue I find the long-baked (or grudge) from the Secretary of the last 24th of May sports.

In starting this controversy I did not entirely foreman decide to require expert opinion. I think on change and not on. I am assuming one single instance. I believed this attack on the whole criticism was without foundation. But the letter for one of the working men of a newspaper, assuming the type, was used to a man a man's family by the Secretary. I believe to believe in the 24th of May sports were a pretty badly mixed outfit. In answer to his letter, I am nothing to say more than that I cannot see the error, and we are only a few days after the 24th of May. I have found my opinion, and I am not at all obliged to give the valuation the public will place upon it. Thanking you for the space allowed to this lengthy controversy, I am still, Sir, your obedient servant.

CHURCH NEWS.

Consecration at the South Branch.

The Sunday next the 22nd inst. the Rev. W. H. Cooper, F. R. C. S., will preach both morning and evening in St. Mary's Church, when he will give some interesting details in reference to the mission work of the great English Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Mr. Cooper arrived on Sunday last and preached an admirable sermon in St. Mary's Church in the evening. His Lordship, the Bishop, stated that next Sunday there would be a special collection at both services in aid of the funds of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. He explained that it was customary to have such a collection once a year in each Mission helped by the Society. After a discourse had been organized and certain time, and that he thought the time had now arrived for beginning the practice in this Diocese. He spoke in very earnest terms of the great help that the Society had been to himself and his Diocese ever since his consecration. Mr. Cooper will also preach on Sunday at 3 p.m. in St. Catherine's Church, when there will be a special collection for the same purpose. Mr. Cooper is the guest of His Lordship, the Bishop, at Emmanuel College.

On Saturday next, the 21st inst., the interesting ceremony of consecrating the Church and churchyard of St. Andrew at the South Branch will be performed by His Lordship, the Bishop of Saskatchewan. The Bishop will be accompanied by the Rev. W. H. Cooper, F. R. C. S., who will act as his chaplain on the occasion and will also preach the sermon.
